but just to send the petition to the planning commission. Councilwomen Shari Lazenby made the motion to move forward with the annexation which passed three to one, Councilman Terry Lange opposed it.

The property owners within the annexation can still oppose the annexation. The city encouraged any property owner who wishes to express their concern to do so in writing.

Facilities Management Plan

In other business, Heber City also presented a revision to the Facilities Management Plan at a public hearing during the Thursday night meeting. The plan is used to manage the services Heber offers to its residents.

Several changes to the plan include an addition of a city wide trail system linking parks and open spaces, and an overall reduction of impact fees.

Daniel resident, Dr. Kelly Jarvis, asked the council if they would still trade for impact fees, citing a recent trade between D. Ray Hult and Heber City where Heber waived $14,000 for the addition of open space within the Greenfields Townhomes.

Although the city council could not recall the transaction, they indicated that impact fees would be assessed at every development unless the trade was of equal value to the city.

The city tabled the approval of the revisions to the Facilities Management Plan until the next city council meeting.

Airport Environmental Assessment

In an unrelated item, Heber City has approved to move forward on the grant to perform the Environmental Assessment for the expansion of the airport.

The grant through the Federal Aviation Administration would pay for approximately 95 percent of the estimated $150,000 for the EA to be performed by Armstrong Consultants, the other 5 percent would come from Heber City funds.

If the grant is approved, the study would begin in May or June of this year, pending additional public meetings and input, and could be completed within one year.

Johnson said she hopes the Saturday, Feb. 14 benefit helps to keep the CJC in the public eye. "I want to help make the community more aware of the center. There are a lot of people here who don't know we have this service."

The dinner begins at 6:30 p.m. and dancing begins at 9 p.m. Johnson said patrons can come to dance only, too. R.S.V.P. for tickets to Johnson at 654-3769.
